- Louisa Chafee Weiss, University of Alabama School of Law (2L)
- Ben Clark, University of Alabama School of Law (2L)
- Walker Fortenberry, University of Virginia School of Law (2L)
- Stephen Galloway, Vanderbilt University School of Law (1L)
- Trent Gill, University of Alabama School of Law (1L)
- Nick Langford, Duke University School of Law (2L)
- Caroline Leak, Samford University Cumberland School of Law (1L)
- Meghan Marks, Emory University School of Law (1L)
- Chase Mays, Vanderbilt University School of Law (1L)
- Sadler McKeen, Samford University Cumberland School of Law (1L)
- Molly Mitchell, University of Alabama School of Law (1L)
- Madeline Turner, University of Alabama School of Law (2L)
- Kayla Williams, Tulane University Law School (2L)
- Tyler Yarbrough, Samford University Cumberland School of Law (2L)

Lightfoot's six-week, in-person summer associate program immerses students in all stages of litigation at the firm's Birmingham office. Summer associates will experience the work of Lightfoot's trial lawyers in action firsthand by attending depositions, observing trials and working on meaningful assignments with Fortune 500 clients. The firm's experienced attorneys will also provide focused training, including teaching associates the art of jury persuasion and preparing participants to deliver mock arguments in a local courtroom.
