SAM MCALLISTER QUOTED IN LAW.COM ARTICLE COVERING EVOLVING LEGAL TECHNOLOGY IN 2022

January 12, 2022

Lightfoot, Franklin & White LLC Director of Legal Technology Sam McAllister was recently quoted in a Law.com article covering legal technology trends and predictions for 2022.

The article, titled “Legal Tech’s Predictions for Business of Law and ALSPs in 2022,” consults attorneys and legal technologists nationwide, seeking their perspective on how legal innovation will continue to change the practice of law and what they anticipate in the coming year.

“I expect to see a lot more firms addressing operational challenges by designing and building their own software solutions,” McAllister said. Taking ownership of the process can lead to a more polished product and potential cost savings that better address client needs in the long run.”

As Director of Technology, McAllister does just that, continually collaborating with attorneys on their casework by streamlining communication with clients and crafting personalized technology solutions. Most recently, he was recognized as a “2021 American Legal Technology Awards” finalist for his in-house litigation technology work while at Lightfoot.
