A litigator focused on the details

Andrew Weisenfeld brings an eye for detail to every matter. He learned the importance of understanding every aspect of a case while at the University of Alabama School of Law, where he was a finalist in the school's Campbell Moot Court competition. He also competed for the Philip C. Jessup International Moot Court team, where he represented the United States in the competition's international rounds. Andrew served as the lead articles editor of the Law and Psychology Review and a member of the school's mediation clinic.

Outside of the office, Andrew enjoys running, biking, and exploring the Birmingham food scene with his fiancé, Anne. On the weekends, you'll find him in Tuscaloosa cheering on the Crimson Tide.
