Mary Parrish McCracken loves working hand-in-hand with her clients.

Since joining Lightfoot, Mary Parrish has established herself as a diligent litigator who prioritizes her relationships with her clients. She responds thoughtfully and decisively to problems, all while tailoring her strategy to a client's unique goals. Her empathetic, bespoke approach to client representation explains why she is a go-to resource for organizations and individuals across a variety of industries.

A significant portion of Mary Parrish's work falls within the firm's White-Collar Criminal Defense & Corporate Investigations, Medical Malpractice, and Products Liability practice groups. She has substantial experience advocating for executives and stakeholders through all phases of federal or state agency investigations, including high-profile U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) criminal probes. She also shepherds prominent physicians through high-stakes medical malpractice disputes that put their licenses and livelihoods on the line. In addition, she works with well-known companies around high-stakes environmental, toxic tort, and product liability actions.

Some of her representative matters include:

- Securing the dismissal of criminal antitrust claims against a poultry industry salesman who was among a number of executives, individuals, and businesses accused of anticompetitive price-fixing.
- Securing a key regulatory win for a cryptocurrency exchange in an administrative enforcement matter before the Alabama Securities Commission, which rescinded a prior show-cause order regarding the exchange's staking program.
- Obtaining a full defense verdict for a national truck and trailer renting company in a $1 million personal injury case.
- Obtaining summary judgment on behalf of a physician in a wrongful death medical malpractice case, successfully arguing that Alabama's statutory immunity for care rendered during or related to COVID-19
